Louis James as Hamlet—Next Week's Plays at the Theaters—General Notes.

The Theater again held a large audience last night when Louis James closed the engagement by giving his interpretation of Hamlet, and the enthusiastic reception accorded the principal players was evidence enough that, in the judgment of a critical audience, the work of Mr. James and his supporting company does no discredit to the art from a comparison with that of the greatest interpreters of Shakespearean characters that ever lived, since the days of the immortal bard himself. The play was frequently applauded and certain calls followed every act. It was almost an ovation.

Hamlet is conceived to be one of Shakespeare's most difficult characters, impossible to portray except by one who possesses both genius, comprehensive knowledge and much experience. It takes the artistic power of the actor to the utmost. A mechanical reading of but a single sentence in the sometimes lengthy monologues is enough to deprive it of much of its beauty. The character was a great philosopher and can be interpreted only by one who can follow him into the depths of philosophy. The difficulties in the way of ambitions and intelligent interpretations are therefore often insurmountable from the first. A quote in which there are many pauses on the part of the speaker, is enough to distract the audience. The play is a series of new and unique pictures.

Hamlet is a fine opponent of the anti-socialists, who has spent his life in secret under the tutelage of capable teaching instructors, and who will soon make his debut in the theater. He is a student of the old school, and is destined to be a great teacher.

and Rose, two characters widely appreciated.

Miss Wainwright brings with her a good supporting company, among whom are Nathaniel Parker, George Hall, Miss Cliffe, Mrs. Hill, while the roles of Adah, Rosina, and others.

Henry E. Dixey.

This evening we will enjoy company of Dixey, who will appear at the theater on Saturday evening, Jan. 5, in a three-act comedy, "The Library in Love," which is said to be his adaptation of Augustus Daly's "The Library in Love." The author of the original drama, Henry Dixey, is the celebrated French comedian, Cognacq. After a season of heavy tragedy at the theater, a good comedy should be welcome and appreciated.

John D. Nutting.

Negotiations are now in progress between James C. Williamson, the Australian manager, and Peter Lanyon, the English manager, for the transfer of the Australian manager's company from the Lyceum theater, New York, and the production will be complete in every detail. Aside from the fact that the piece is clever both in plot and construction, it will be well received by the public.

The World of Music.

On the 7th and 8th of January the Orpheus club will present at the Hallie Chaser's theater, Boston, Romeo and Juliet, under the direction of W. L. Bassett. The Orpheus club is an amateur club, but it is well known in several parts of the country. They give this entertainment at considerable expense, because it is in every respect equal to it in our professional companies, if not better.
